ACKNOWLEDGMENT and DISCLAIMER [Please read, sign and date]:

By signing below, I acknowledge being informed of the following:

Attorney Tanksley does not render legal advice unless he is retained by written retainer agreement (which this is not) or in return for a paid consultation fee (a receipt will be provided). If this is an initial consultation request, any information that may be received from Attorney Tanksley would be intended to be relatively brief and preliminary in nature (unless otherwise provided in a written retainer agreement) and would be subject to change if he had the opportunity, and additional payment, for further review and analysis, or if there were additional facts and information. If a more detailed analysis is requested, a written retainer agreement would be prepared and additional payment deposit requested. In all cases, the potential success, duration and cost of any potential litigation or other legal matter cannot be predicted with certainty or guaranteed. It would likely involve other parties, attorneys and the court system.

This is NOT an agreement to bring or defend a legal action, which would require a written retainer agreement, signed by the prospective client and by Attorney Tanksley, together with any requisite funds deposit under the terms of such agreement. In the event there is no written retainer agreement promptly entered into with Attorney Tanksley (along with payment of the retainer deposit), he assumes no responsibility for the matter.

If the prospective client wishes to take steps toward pursuing or defending a legal action, or believes they may need other legal assistance, they should promptly seek out and retain a qualified attorney. If they unduly delay or fail to do so, there may be legal barriers and other adverse consequences that could seriously undermine or bar potential claims, defenses or rights.

I read and understand the above, and have received aa copy of this document.
